

6516207511.txt

Without going into arguments of constitutional rights, I would like to express my belief in applying the principles of democracy and free market to all situations; as I believe it applies to this one. If the listeners of XM radio do not wish to use services such as weather and traffic channels, or any other channels, they will not use them. This would eliminate any incentive to provide such services. However, to artificially control the content offered for any other reasons is unjust, and must then be protectionist to some party. In general, protectionist policies will only harm businesses and consumers in the long run, and are fundamentally crippling in an open society. I urge any policy makers not to bend into supporting such policies as they apply to radio. To do so in a way that would affect paying consumers, denying them of receiving full value of a product they are PAYING for, would be criminal.